France. Université.

The Université de France was organized under an order (1808) of Napoleon I, reviving the Université de Paris and the provincial universities or faculties which had been suppressed in 1793, and centralizing the educational system of France, the organization taking effect 1808. This was continued until 1850, when by a reorganization the administration of the universities again became independent.

In the Library of Congress catalog all official publications of the Université de France, such as the "Code universitaire", etc., are entered under the heading "France. Université"; works about the university have subject entries both under "France. Université" and "Paris. Université".
